steads in the window of the house and assists him to escape, although he is compelled to roll down the steep hillside to a point of mafety before his manacles are removed. Once this is accomplished, the authorities having just discovered his absence, put after him in a hot chase, but arrive only in time to see him crossing the Mexican border to freedom.

For Munday and Tuesday only the Breed will present the last of the famous Irish pictures, entitled You Remember Ellen, adapted from the famous poem by Tom Moore, by the same name. This is taken whelly in Ireland and is delightfully different from the former dramas made in Ireland. Its appeal is through the delicate touches which denote superlative acting, masterly producing and picturesque settings.

THE NORTHERN LIGHTS.

FOETRY.

A child sat by the window, as the day-light slowly fied.

And clearly o'er the winter sky the Boreails spread;

"What is that lovely light there, which sends out beams so broad?"

Oh, can it be some child who takes his allent way to God?"

The mother answered simply: "Tis the Northern Lights you see."
But then the question followed of what those lights could be.
"The learned do not know as yet—'tis doubtful on the whols;
They think it an electric light that radiates from the pole."

This answer was beyond the boy; he stood without a sound.

And saw the flame grow high and bright upon the dark blue ground.

At last it dawned upon him, with features all aglow.

He threw his arms around her neck, exclaiming: "Huch, I know!"

"When angels o'er the darkened earth,
with heaven's message fly.
And 'neath the deep blue starry roof
the white wings swiftly ply.
Then is the sky all lighted up, the roay flames appear:
We do not see the wings, oh, no! we see the shadows here.

"When you become alone on earth, and heaven had bidden me. Then I shall stand behind the gleam and send a word to thee."
